

Backpack Contact Page Privacy Checklist

A simple review for the parent-selected page behind an NFC tag. Share only the contact route your family chooses.

01 Choose the adult contact

Decide which parent, guardian, or caregiver should receive a message. Pick a contact method that the family is comfortable sharing with a finder.

02 Keep the page brief

Use only what a finder needs to reach that adult. Check the full page, including headings, images, file names, and linked documents.

03 Review what is visible

Leave off the child's full name, school, classroom, home address, daily schedule, photo, and unnecessary medical details. Keep passwords and access codes off the page.

04 Check who can open it

Review the page's sharing settings. If the intended contact route requires a sign-in, decide whether a finder can reach it as intended.

05 Tap-test with another phone

Ask a trusted adult to scan the tag with their own compatible phone. Confirm the right page opens, the adult contact is clear, and the page works outside the owner's account.

Keep it current

Name an adult who will review the contact route when phone numbers, caregivers, or routines change. Test the tag again after an update.

Know what the tag does. It opens a selected page when tapped by a compatible phone. It does not track a child or bag, send alerts, verify a caller, or guarantee that a finder taps or returns the bag. Follow the family's and institution's existing procedures.
